Michael Glennon visited Headquarters on 8 September 1978 to review documents relevant to the Subcommittee on International Operations' investigation of foreign intelligence activities in the U.S. Glennon appeared pleased at the way the understanding on the third agency rule reached at the 3 August Senate-House conference on the State Department Authorization bill was working out. Glennon did not choose to argue that the Subcommittee's of suggesting changes in the Foreign Agents Registration Act ated a more broadly focused investigation, i.e., one of Korean-e influence buying activities in general. Should Glennon choose in e to argue that the Subcommittee's investigation is not merely to the harassment of U.S. residents by foreign nce services, but covers broader matters related to the Agents Registration Act, he would be on fairly firm ground Foreign Agents Registration Act does deal generally with the s of "agents of foreign principals." While Glennon reviewed documents, the undersigned called vner, Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR), Department of State, ge Calhoun, Chief/Special Litigation section, Criminal Division, ent of Justice, and Special Counsel for Justice Department with the Subcommittee. Heavner said that Glennon's questions epartment had been confined almost exclusively to matters pertaining to the activities of foreign intelligence services in the U.S. (Heavner ed, incidentally, that the State Department's hierarchy was still ning how the Department would respond to certain questions on ic surveillance. Heavner's impression was that the Department's e would be in line with the plan of action agreed upon at the inter-neeting held at CIA Headquarters on 25 August. Heavner said that ht INR Director William Bowdler would eventually call the DDCI to further on this matter.) The conversation with Mr. Calhoun revealed questions posed by the Subcommittee to the Department of Justice had been somewhat broader than those posed to the Department Calhoun noted that when the subject of the relevancy of some s to the Subcommittee's investigation had been raised, Glennon's had been that the Subcommittee was attempting to look at how Systematic Information-Sharing (page 73):

The Senate amendment (section 467) states the finding of Congress that State Department international political, economic, and other studies could be valuable to the two foreign affairs committees of the Congress and that a formal information sharing arrangement between the State Department and the two committees could serve the national interest provided that controls are established to protect necessary confidentiality. The Senate amendment directs the Secretary of State to transmit to the Congress, not later than January 20, 1979, recommendations for establishing such an information-sharing arrangement.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

Administration position: The administration agrees that a carefully conceived information sharing arrangement with the Congress would be beneficial to the Department and the Congress.
